JAMES H. MOORE, of Vigo, Gen. McClellan and the Draft. If there is anything more obnoxious than every other to Democrats generally, it is the idea of a draft. This in their eyes is the height of tyranny. Hence the occasion of a draft has always been with them a season of murmuring, it their discontest has not assumed the form of open resistance to the lovernment, as in the New York riots, and n several other instances. It is well known that one of the main objects of the O. A. organization, which embraces a large, and in many places the controlling, element of the Democratic party, is resistance to a draft, and nowhere can the proposition for drafting be made without stirring up the Democracy like a pest of horners. What then must be the surprise of the public to learn that the man whom one wing of the Democracy is trying to force upon the party as a Presidential candidate, may be described as in one ense the father of the drafting system in this country-being the first man to urge a draft in this war, and that at a time when the Government was having more men tendered by volunteering than it could arm or knew what to do with. Such is the fact. On the 20th day of August, 1861, just a month after the first battle of Bull Run, when volunteers were pouring into Washington by regiments and brigades, General McClellan wrote a letter to the President, in which he advocated a resort to an immediate draft. He wanted "drafts to be made at once." The General Marcy, his father-in-law and chief of staff, to General McClellap, that he should make "a positive and unconditional demand for an immediate draft." and communicated by McClellan to the President. The propo sition of General Marcy was in the form of a dispatch from New York, where Marcy then was, to McClellan, at Washington, and is as "Naw York, August 20, 1861. "I urge upon you to make a positive and unconditional demand for an immediate draft of the additional troops you require. Men will not volunteer now, and dratting is the only successful plan. The people will applaud such a course, rely upon it. I will be it Washington to-morrow. This very cool and remarkable production General McClellan forwarded to the President on its reception, with the following note of hearty approval: WASHINGTON, August 20, 1861. "Srs: I have just received the enclosed dispatch in cipher. Colonel Marcy knows what he says, and is of the coolest judgment. I recommend that the Scoretary of War ascertain at of Thy telegram how the enrollment proceeds in New York and elsewhere. and that, if it is not proceeding with great rapidity, drafts to be made at once. We must have men without delay. Respectfully. your obedient servant.
